

Boss Lift Program

A boss lift offers employers an opportunity to visit military installations throughout the nation to observe National Guard and Reserve members involved in training exercises. Employers experience first hand the quality of training and leadership activities their uniformed employees receive as part of the total force. The sites selected for boss lifts usually emphasize National Guard and Reserve and can include multiple branches of the military.

Boss lifts also provide employers the opportunity to share their insights on the challenges and benefits of having employees that serve in the Reserve components. Participants are asked about their concerns regarding their employees. They are encouraged to offer recommendations and ideas for improving the employer/employee relationship with respect to the consequences of military service. Lastly, employers are asked about their overall assessment of employer support programs and services.
